Dear Mr. Moxon:

That's perfect, because I'll only respond to your communication's last line as well and thank you for your agreement.

Yours sincerely,

I won't respond to your communication but for the last line.

I agree to exchange courtesy copies of all papers filed.

Re: Scientology v. Armstrong
Marin Superior Court Case No. CV021632

Dear Mr. Moxon:

You're welcome for the information. That's a lot better than scurrilous, untrue and unnecessary, almost anyone I'm sure would agree.

On August 16 I e-mailed you to ask your client "to agree to mutual e-mailed courtesy copies of court documents in this case." The only "consideration" I added, and clearly mentioned because of its axiomaticity, was that if your client did not agree, then "there is no choice but to rely completely on our national postal systems or couriers."

<http://www.gerryarmstrong.org/50grand/legal/a7/e-mail-armstrong-moxon-2007-08.html>

I do not show receipt of any communication from you that your client accepted my proposal or even that you had relayed my offer for consideration. The next communication from you that I am aware of is your September 4 e-mail advising me you were going to bring an ex parte application on September 7. It goes without saying that you didn't show up in court at the date and time you stated, and didn't bother to advise me that you were not going to be there, or that you hadn't been there.

The problem with your service of documents is not my agreement or not to be served by e-mail. The problem is your dishonesty that serves an evil purpose. I acknowledge your willingness to serve me with hard copies at my current postal address.

You cannot help but know that I have e-mailed you a courtesy copy of all documents (except for exhibits where voluminous) that I have filed since I made my August 16 offer to your client. You yourself state in your footnote in your reply memorandum (the same footnote in which you claim that on September 1 you hadn't received the documents you had received August 31) that I had ""served" [my] Opposition after the close of business by email on August 30, 2007."

Since August 16, I have filed four documents in this case, all of which I served on you by courier, and e-mailed you a courtesy copy. As far as I know, you filed one document, your reply, and didn't e-mail me a courtesy copy, and you "served" it at a postal address you knew was wrong.

I won't agree that we serve each other by email. You have already attained an OT level of service flimflammy in this litigation. With your new willingness to serve me at my actual postal address, I think we've made a good first step, and you should work hard to maintain this standard without fail. I would now again propose mutual e-mailed courtesy copies of court documents.

Yours sincerely,

Gerry Armstrong

Thank you for this information.

As you know, I had requested agreement several weeks ago that we agree to serve each other by email but you required other considerations. I'm certainly willing to use email in the future (and hard copy service at our current addresses) to avoid future problems.

Are we agreed?
